

Old is not always old

When something becomes older we just throw it out. This is because its utility has finished to us. This does not necessarily mean the ultimate utility of that product is zero. It might be that what is waste for someone is very expected or important for someone else. In particular to talk about our old cloths, generally we left our cloths when these become older and we do not have any particular plan about these staffs. If we think little more deeply we can realize that these old cloths can make many people smile if we just little bit more sympathetic. There are millions of people in Bangladesh particularly in the slum of Dhaka city who do not get enough food, cloth and accommodations. We do not have ability to ensure their food or accommodation but we can do something for them very easily just only by saving our old cloths and give these to them who are extremely suffering for this.

Now the question may arise that who will collect those cloths and distribute among the people mostly the innocent children. SOHAY is a nonprofit development organization working for the child education and rights. It cannot do everything with its limited resources but it always tries to provide its maximum effort to do something more. According to this every year SOHAY collect some old cloths from various sources and distributes these among the slum children who are joined with SOHAY. Few days ago SOHAY collected some old cloths for the children under the project of GFC and distributed them among the children of Urban Development Center. After having the cloths children did not think about new or old because these are definitely new to them. After receiving the cloths they have expressed their feeling and emotion in many ways. In common generally they say we are feeling good but the actual feeling come out with their innocent smile and joy. One of the children name Tanzila, who are nine years old express her feeling like that “my cloths became very older and my father do not have ability to buy a new cloth for me because I have another brother and sister but now I have got new cloths from SOHAY and now I will be able to come to UDC regularly”.

Another children name is Shuva (10) replies that his cloths were become unusable, she was facing a great problem to come to UDC or any other places, but she has got a frog and she is very thankful and happy to SOHAY. These are the part of the activities of SOHAY. There are a lot of thing also to do for them. Which needs nothing but only little sympathy and good willingness and these can make 1000 of children happy and joyful. Therefore SOHAY expect more helping hand and kind heart to do something more for them.
